Concussion: Holiday Survival Guide

Ask for Help!

A concussion is an invisible injury. If friends and family don't understand what's happening with us, they can't adapt.

Sunglasses and Earplugs

Wear sunglasses and earplugs/headphones to help with lights and noises.

Quiet/Safe Space

Designate an area or room of the house where you can go when you need a break.

Recharge

Find something that helps you relax (yoga, meditation, tai chi).

Avoid Crowded Stores

Use Amazon shopping lists to plan & purchase gifts. Utilize online order and delivery services offered by grocery stores for holiday meal supplies.

Create Code Words

Agree on a code/safe word with loved ones to communicate when you need a "brain rest".

Reduce Kitchen Stress

Create a cooking plan that includes ingredients, tools, and cook times beforehand.

Plan Ahead

Avoid multi-tasking by planning your day or week in advance.

Communicate with Hosts

If you're attending social events, let the hosts know your limitations ahead of time and that you may need to leave suddenly.

Prioritize Family/Friends

Avoid crowded social events and focus on spending time with the people you're close to.

Verbalize Your Limitations

Noisy activities and meals can be overwhelming - share your limits and coping methods with your family.

Pace Yourself

Know your own limits and stop before you reach them.
